c. gair cyrch = c. lusg. c. 1460–1600.

c. lusg, llusg g.: a 'cynghanedd' in which a final syllable in the first part of the line rhymes internally with the accented penultimate syllable; the first rhyme, and hence the division of the line into two, can occur at any convenient point (lit. 'trailing "cynghanedd"). c. 1460–1500.

c. bengoll,—bendoll: a form of 'cynghanedd' found in early Welsh poetry which leaves a redundant portion at the end of the line (lit. headless 'cynghanedd'). It is confined at present to the second line of a 'toddaid byr'. c. 1460–1500.

c. sain (lefn): a 'cynghanedd' which is a combination of consonance and internal rhyme and in which the line forms three parts, the last syllable of the first part rhyming with the last syllable of the second part, and the consonants of the second part alliterating with those of the third part (lit. sonorous 'cynghanedd'). c. 1460–1500.

c. (sain) gadwynog: 'cynghanedd sain' in which the line forms four parts, the first rhyming with the third and the second alliterating with the fourth (lit. linked sonorous 'cynghanedd'). Dchr. 16g.

c. sain o gyswllt: 'cynghanedd sain' in which the last consonant of the second part is taken as the first consonant of the third part, or vice versa, to obtain consonance. a. 1575.

c. draws: an incomplete form of 'cynghanedd groes' in which a portion in the middle of the line is left outside the scheme of consonance (lit. traversing 'cynghanedd'). c. 1460–1500.

c. draws gyferbyn: 'cynghanedd draws' that occurs when the second part of a divided word forms 'cynghanedd', leaving the first part outside the scheme of alliteration. a. 1575.

c. draws fantach: 'cynghanedd draws' in which one consonant or a combination of consonants alliterates, leaving a large gap without alliteration in the middle of the line (lit. toothless 'cynghanedd'). a. 1575.

c. unodl,—unawdl: 'cynghanedd sain' and 'cynghanedd lusg' (the two 'cynghaneddion' in which internal rhyming occurs). c. 1460–1500.

Cfn.: cywydd brud: prognostic 'cywydd'. 18g.

c. byrfaich = c. deuair fyrion. p. 1584.

c. cymod: 'cywydd' or reconciliation. Dchr. 17g.

c. deuair: one of the three main varieties of the 'cywydd' (the others are 'awdl-gywydd' and 'cywydd llosgyrnog'), so called because the couplet is the unit of rhyme; this 'cywydd deuair' is subdivided into 'cywydd deuair fyrion' and 'cywydd deuair hirion'. c. 1400.

c. deuair fyrion: rhyming couplet of lines of four syllables, originally without consonance. c. 1400.

c. deuair hirion: rhyming couplet of 7-syllable lines, one of which must have an accented final syllable, the other an unaccented (some early examples are marked by an absence of consonance in the first line, but early in its development the rules of consonance came to be strictly applied to the metre throughout, and in this form it gained great popularity which lasted for several centuries. By 'cywydd' without qualification is now generally understood 'cywydd deuair hirion'). c. 1400.

c. dychan: satirical 'cywydd'. a. 1565.

c. dyfalu: 'cywydd' in which the subject is described by means of a series of original and fanciful comparisons, metaphors, &c. 20g.

c. galarnad: 'cywydd' of lamentation. 16–17g.

c. gan dant: 'cywydd' sung to the accompaniment of the harp. 16g.

c. hirfraich = c. deuair hirion. p. 1584.

c. llosgyrnog,—llosgyrniog: 'cywydd' composed of two, three, or four octosyllabic lines, followed by a 7-syllable line, with the former rhyming together and also with the caesura of the latter, the end of which sustains the main rhyme (lit. 'tailed 'cywydd'). c. 1400.

c. marwnad,—barnad: elegy. p. 1584.

c. mawl,—moliant: (i) 'cywydd' of eulogy. Diw. 16g. (ii) anthem, hymn. 1655.

c. Nadolig: Christmas carol. 1771.

e. crwca = e. unodl crwca. c. 1400.

e. (ynglyn) cyrch: 'englyn' consisting of two lines of seven syllables each, followed by an 'awdl-gywydd'; in the 'strict' version of the metre, the same rule applies to the accent of the rhyme-words in the two lines as in a 'cywydd' couplet, but in the corresponding 'free' version (much in vogue in popular poetry and also known as '(englyn) triban'), the rhyme-words in question both end unaccented. 14g.

e. (ynglyn) gar hir,—garhir: 'englyn' which is similar in pattern to 'englyn unodl union', its distinctive feature, however, being the interpolation between the third and fourth lines of the latter of a 'cywydd deuir fyrion' (lit. long-shanked 'englyn'). a. 1575.

e. gwastad: ‘englyn’ of four rhyming seven-syllable lines, i.e. an ‘englyn milwr’ with an extra line appended (lit. even ‘englyn’). 20g.

e. (ynglyn) o(r) hen ganiad (o’r hengerdd, o’r henwaith): one of the three principal kinds of ‘englyn’ (the other two being ‘englyn proest’ and ‘englyn unodl’), a comprehensive term for ‘englyn byr crwca’, ‘englyn milwr’ and ‘englyn penfyr’ (lit. ‘englyn’ of the old poetry). 14g.

e. hir: metre consisting of two or three single ‘englynion’ combined (lit. long ‘englyn’). c. 1400.

e. (ynglyn) milwr: ‘englyn’ of three monorhymed lines of seven syllables each (lit. warrior’s ‘englyn’). a. 1575.

e. pendrwm: ‘englyn’ resembling ‘englyn unodl union’ in all respects except that the third and fourth lines therein are an ‘awdl-gywydd’, i.e. the final syllable of the third line rhymes with the caesura rather than with the final syllable of the fourth (lit. top-heavy ‘englyn’). 1728.

e. penfyr: ‘englyn’ consisting of a ‘toddaid byr’, &c., followed by a 7-syllable line, and having the same rhyme throughout (lit. short-headed ‘englyn’). 20g.

e. (ynglyn) proest (profest, &c.): one of the three basic varieties of ‘englyn’, being a stanza of four 7-syllable lines which may end either accented or unaccented at will; it is named from its substitution of ‘proest’ for rhyme. 14g.

e. (ynglyn) proest (profest, &c.) cadwynog: ‘englyn proest’ in which ‘proest’ is substituted for rhyme in the final syllables of consecutive lines, while rhyme does occur in those of alternate lines (hence ‘linked’). 14g.

e. (ynglyn) proest (profest, &c.) cyfnewidiog: ‘englyn proest’ in which rhyme is entirely absent, being replaced throughout by ‘proest’. 17g.

e. tair awdl = e. milwr. 1579.

e. triban, gw. e. cyrch. 16g.

e. (ynglyn) unodl,—unawdl: one of the three principal varieties of ‘englyn’ (see ‘englyn o’r hen ganiad’), the stanza having the same rhyme throughout. 14g.

e. (ynglyn) unodl (unawdl) crwca: ‘englyn’ in which the arrangement of ‘englyn unodl union’ is simply reversed, the couplet of 7-syllable lines (i.e. the ‘esgyll’) preceding the ‘toddaid byr’ which forms the ‘paladr’. c. 1400.

e. (ynglyn) unodl (unawdl) cyrch = e. cyrch. a. 1575.

e. (ynglyn) unodl (unawdl) union: direct monorhyme quatrain formed by the addition of a couplet of ‘deuair hirion’ to a ‘toddaid byr’ (this is the type regularly denoted by the term ‘englyn’). c. 1400.
